

Simon Henderson

International human rights lawyer and academic

Simon Henderson is an international human rights lawyer, academic and foreign policy analyst, with extensive experience in policy and advocacy in Australia and in the Indo-Pacific. He is currently Head of Policy at Save the Children Australia, based out of Japan, where he is responsible for providing leadership on domestic and international child rights issues. He is also a Visiting Lecturer at The University of Tokyo and The Education University of Hong Kong.

Simon's previous experience includes roles at Justice Centre Hong Kong, Law Council of Australia, the Department of Foreign Affairs and Trade, and Human Rights in China. He provides advice to a wide range of organisations, governments, and parliamentarians, often appearing before parliamentary committees and presenting at legal conferences. Simon is frequently quoted in the media on human rights and foreign policy issues.

Simon is a member of the Human Rights Committee of the Law Society of New South Wales and the LAWASIA Human Rights Committee. He holds a Bachelor of Commerce, Bachelor of Laws and Graduate Diploma in Legal Practice from The Australian National University, and a Masters in International Law from the Fletcher School of Law and Diplomacy. Simon is admitted as a lawyer to the ACT Supreme Court and the High Court of Australia.